Read the passage reproduced below and answer questions (1-5):

The practice of naturopathy can be traced back to over 1,000 years to the time of Hippocrates, who is known as the father of medicine (460 BC to 357 BC). He considered diseases to be an effect of imbalances in such natural elements as air, water, sunshine and nourishment.

As the name suggests, naturopathy is the treatment or prevention of disease without drugs, using natural therapies like changes in diet and lifestyle. It is based on the belief that the body is self-healing and has the ability to repair itself and recover from illness, if in a healthy environment. Naturopathy also deems that the power to restore health lies not in drugs but in nature. The modern medical system, on the other hand, depends on drugs it treats the symptom and suppresses the disease, but often does little to ascertain the real root of the problem. Naturopathy seeks to find the cause of the symptom and then treats it with natural changes bases on individual requirements. According to this type of therapy, physical problems are invariably a result of emotional imbalances caused by the stress of modern life. Yet another cause of diseases is the accumulation of waste and toxins in the body. Consequently, a basic foundation of naturopathy is that the mind, body and soul are interconnected and cannot be treated in isolation.
